Sir Henry Cole (1843)

The idea for the very first Christmas card came from Sir Henry Cole (the founder of London's Victoria and Albert Museum) in England, 1843. Cole couldn't find the time to respond to all of his letters so he asked an artist friend, John Callcott Horsley, to create a card that he could send instead.

Horsley's design featured a picture of a family having a party with pictures of people helping the poor on either side. A thousand copies were printed onto card and then sold in London.
